FINAL PROGRAM IN MCH SERIES
IS FEB. 28 IN GLENDIVE

MISSOULA--

Dr. Margaret Kingsland, director of the Montana Committee for the Humanities (MCH), an organization based at the University of Montana in Missoula, has announced that several coal-related discussions will comprise the last of five MCH-sponsored regional conferences on Saturday, Feb. 28, in Glendive.

The free public conference will consist of a keynote lecture and a panel discussion on three basic questions--"Can We Afford to Develop Coal?"; "Can We Afford Not To?", and "Does Technology Call the Tune?"

Joseph J. Friederichs, a chemistry instructor at Dawson College, Glendive, will be the conference moderator. The conference will be from 10 a.m.-3 p.m. Feb. 28 in the basement meeting room of the Congregational United Church, 120 W. Power, Glendive.

Keynote speaker will be Dr. Raymond L. Gold, professor of sociology at UM. Gold's lecture, set for 10 a.m. Feb. 28, is entitled "What Difference Further Coal Development Would Make in the Lives of Eastern Montanans."

His remarks will be followed by the panel discussion. Panelists will include: Dr. Harry E. Hausser, Bozeman, professor of philosophy at Montana State University; Dr. Patrick C. Jobes, professor of sociology at MSU, and Jeannette Studer, Billings, an economist for the Old West Regional Commission.

After the panelists complete their presentations, the discussion will be opened to the audience. Those attending the conference are urged to bring sack lunches because the discussion will last through the lunch hour.

Following the program Feb. 28, MCH staff members will be available to give advice on grant criteria for MCH-funded projects.
